NEW NARRATIVES

A WEBINAR SERIES

PART 2: INTEGRATED TREATMENT PROGRAMS
FOR PREGNANT AND PARENTING WOMEN WHO USE SUBSTANCES

The Presenters

Dr. Karen Urbanoski is a Scientist with the Canadian Institute for Substance Use Research and Assistant Professor in Public Health and Social Policy at the University of Victoria. Prior to coming to the University of Victoria in 2015, she was a Scientist at CAMH, where she still holds a position as a Collaborator Scientist. Dr. Urbanoski's research program is focused on the social determinants of substance-related problems and how these affect the accessibility, equity, and effectiveness of substance use services and, in turn, health outcomes.

Dr. Karen Milligan is a registered clinical psychologist and Associate Professor in the Department of Psychology at Ryerson University. Her research program explores cognitive and emotional factors that impact on parenting and mental health outcomes of mothers and children. She has a specific interest in women parenting in the context of problematic substance use and its associated harms.

You Will Learn

- About the unique mental and physical health service needs of pregnant and parenting women who use substances
- What the researchers have uncovered about what works best when providing integrated treatment for this population
- From other audience members about their experience providing interventions for mothers who use substances

Who Should Attend?

Service providers who are interested in multi-sectoral collaboration, including those from substance use, mental health, child protection, and public health sectors.

Sharing Together

This webinar meets evidence priorities identified by Sharing Together, an EENet initiative to promote the use of evidence to improve the health care experience and overall wellbeing of all Ontarians.
